Young people against nuclear weapons on their way to the Trafalgar Square rally.

50,000 rally against the bomb

In the biggest rally against nuclear weapons since CND's heyday in the early 1960s more than 50,000 people marched through central London yester-day demanding unilateral disarmament.
The demonstration embracing most political positions left of the Conservative Party and dozens of environmental and protest groups, looked like a medieval procession as for several hours it wound its way festooped with banners from Hyde Park Corner to a mass rally in Trafalgar Square. For the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, which organized the protest, it was proof that there has been a massive resurgence of the anti-nuclear movement during the past year.

They believe that has been inspired by the growing threat of nuclear war since the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and by the Government's decision to buy American Trident missiles and base cruise missiles in this country.

Several demonstrators on the march dressed in anti-fallout clothing and wore gas masks; and others limped along in bloodstained bandages to bring their message home.

Some wore skull masks with skeletons drawn on their clothes and carried signs saying, "I followed government instruc-tions " or " You too could have

A last-minute attempt to call a truce in the dispute over prison officers pay for meal breaks, failed at the weekend. Today Mr William Whitelaw. the Home Secretary, will tell Parliament of his contingency The Army has been looking at ways in which it can help the police, including possibly and whether military camps might be used to house prisoners now packed into cells ar police stations and courts.

It is believed that the 1st

Mr Whitelaw's options include the Emergency Powers Act, 1964, and the Emergency Powers Act, 1920. It is possible that the Home Secretary will have to go to Parliament to seek new powers, not necessarily under those two Acts.

One way out of the dispute could be found by the reconvening of that part of the May Committee which examined the pay claim now in dispute.

Mr Whitelaw has ruled out arbitration, which the prison officers want, saying that the May Committee has already decided against the claim for meal

But the officers believe the meaning of the paragraph in question is open to a different interpretation. Argument about it has led to the present disute. It seems that if the May Committee were recalled, there would be a good chance that the officers would consider a truce during its deliberations, to be taken by a delegate con-ference. The officers have already said they would stand by arbitration findings.

They say the May inquiry was not a proper arbitration because in the light of that, the Home Office presented its case with-out giving the officers a proper

The Home Office is adhering firmly to the Home Secretary's ruling that he cannot look back, but only to the future, and that he case the solution in a new he sees the solution in a new streamlined duty scheme now in preparation which will avoid ambiguities which have be devilled the present system. Much birterness has been caused over claims for payments for meal breaks when duties have had to be extended.

So far the prison governors have kept out of the conflict, but before the main inquiry was set up they issued the following warning in what was then less of a potential crisis than the prisons are facing now. "So far we have successfully avoided loss of life during serious disturbances, but if the present trend continues there will be a serious loss of control, which has to be quelled by armed intervention by another service. In such circumstances there is a probability of both staff and prisoners being killed."

There is a strong opinion among the governors that the dispute has become a battle which the Government feels it has to win. Mr Whitelaw has said that even if there were an arbitration in the officers favour, there is no money to

Battle of the Sabbath on the road to Ramot

From Christopher Walker
Jerusalem, Oct 26
On a rocky Jerusalem hillside, the fiercely orthodox Jew with a long, black coat and large for hat was hurling abuse at the tough-looking Israeli reserve paratrooper confronting him across a rusty fence. "You are not a real Jew screamed the zealot, "your mother was not a Jew and neither was your grandmother."

Nearby, stones thrown by an angry crowd of some 100 other ultra orthodox Jews were thumping regularly on cars being driven to and from the secular suburb of Ramot. As each one passed—often driven at breakneck speed with women and children crouched in the back-the orthodox Jews would gesticulate and shout the menacing word "Shabbas" which indicates Sabbath break-

The confrontation, which took place yesterday, shows that the deep split between religious and secular Jews has erupted into violence again after lying dormant for nearly a year. Before the sun went down, the non-orthodox Jews had begun a counterattack. They vowed a bloody revenge next weekend. The cause of the trouble is the refusal of the ultra orthodox to permit the 12,000 residents of Ramot to use the main road of the Jewish Sabbath. The road has became a symbol of the increasing division in Israeli society.

A year ago, the regular ston-ing battles ceased after a compromise with the Jerusalem municipality which agreed to build a £30,000 by-pass to divert offending cars religious houses near the road. However the Ramot residents are now refusing to use the new road and insist on sticking to the six-lane highway.

This is a matter of principle. Our taxes went into this road and we are not going to be driven off it," said Mr Yehudo Yalon, chairman of the Ramot Neighbourhood Council. "The new road is narrow, dangerous, and not what we were prom-

Others in the growing crowd of secular Jews had similar stories to tell. Their hatred for the leaders of the ultra ortho-dox community was uzdisquised. Although the Ramet road is this division society has erupted before over such issues as the opening of Jerusalem's first mixed swimming pool and efforts (so far unsuccessful) to build the city a modern football stadium. "The trouble is that these religious madmen have political influence. The authorities seem they break the laws of a state they refuse to recognize," one of the secular Jews said as the stones continued to be thrown from the Sabbath preservers.

This year is expected in economic terms to be the bleakest in international aviation history, according to Mr Knur Hammarskjöld, director general of the International Air Transport Association in his report on the state of the air transport industry, which will be presented to the annual meeting of the association in Montreal today The industry in 1980 experienced the coinciding impact of recession, inflation, soaring fuel costs, and a market distorted by erratic currency developments and uncoordinated regulatory policies, the report said There was also the fundapental, question of whether, under this cost onslaught, aviation technology could produce a breakthrough to lower cost levels which were seriously threatening market demand.

IATA airlines were aiming on average for a 13 per cent return on investment during 1979. They managed 2.1 per cent before paying interest charges, according to the report.

After interest, their return was minus 16 per cent of investment and minus 1 cent of revenue. On the North Atlantic, where passenger traffic grew by 16 per cent and total revenues by 27 per cent during the year against a moderate capacity increase of 8 per cent, the airlines needed another £330m in revenue to reach the required return.

The economic pattern makes grim reading", said Mr Ham-marskjöld. "These are serious times for the industry. It broadly estimated that it is almost £1,600m short of a level of earnings that would put it footing in the capital market.

"The unreleating escalation of costs outside airline control poses enormous problems for airline managements as they strive to keep the real price of air travel at the present levels —and indeed to bring it lower in response to government and consumer pressures".

Mr Hammarskjöld described he North Atlantic routes as financially ruinous", with airlines needing another 16 per attain their targets.
Financial results generally in the current year would be even rse thán in 1979. Based on information at the end August scheduled services were losing around 4 per cent their operating revenues after paying interest charges. Mr Hammarskjöld was also highly critical of increases in for Cunard seamen

By David Felton Labour Reporter

The dispute over the Cunard Line's decision to transfer some of its ships to flags of convenience could spread after a declaration of support last night for the seamen's union from the Transport and General Workers' Union.

A meeting of the National Union of Seamen's executive this morning is to decide whether Mr James Slater, the general secretary, should meet Lord Matthews, chairman of Cunard, later today. A NUS statement last night claimed that the Cunard Prin-cess, one of the ships involved, which has sailed from San Juan, Puerto Rico, under the Bahaman flag, and with a crew of mixed nationalities, "now constitutes a marine hazard".

The union said that the crew, who are mainly Chinese, French who are mainly Chinese, French and Swiss, were not conversant with some safety regulations and that the ship was unsafe in emergencies because of language barriers. "No seagoing vessels, particularly passenger ships, should be prepared to sail in such conditions." the statement said. ditions", the statement said. Support for the NUS came from Mr Alexander Kitson, deputy general secretary of the TGWU, who said in a letter to the union that Lord Matthews' threat to sell the Queen Elizabeth 2 and other Cunard liners was " yet another example of bully-boy management within the Trafalgar House group".

"The plan to employ cheaper crews under flags of convenience ... can only lead to erosion of levels of pay, con-ditions of employment, trade union rights and safety standards on a wider basis

The dispute between the NUS and Cunard arose over the company's plan to transfer the Cunard Princess and the Cunard Countess to flags of convenience in order to take advantage of cheaper labour costs.

The Conard Countess was last night still trapped in Barbados, where NUS members are occupying the ship. The union yesterday also received a message of support from NUS members on board the QE2, who were practicular thought. who were previously thought to be opposed to the union's action

A Home Office inquiry has started into how a prisoner at Brixton prison, south London, was able to have a night out visiting public houses and clubs.

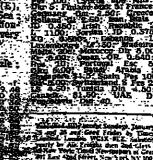

The prisoner was discovered so drunk that he could not climb a rope hanging over a low wall to get back in the prison after an evening out. He was caught when a prison officer living in a house nearby saw him attempting to scale the wall.
Thinking a prison escape might be imminent, the officer called the police, who found the prisoner trying to climb back

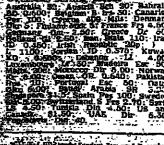

Since the prisoner was dis-covered, all others in the dor-mitory have been moved to a more secure part of the prison. Brixton holds more than 1,000 prisoners, of whom more than three quarters are on remand, with many of the rest serving sentences of less than 18

Many police officers do not relish the task of taking over the police officers; jobs. In police cells policemen have done their best: to help prisoners to cope with conditions which are on occasions barely tolerable.

So far the police have insisted that they are not doing jobs normally done by prison officers. Since the governors have been following a similar line, it is obvious that someone will have to step into the vacant role at Frankland, and the prison officers are waiting to see who that someone is.

They have an executive commirtee meeting arranged for Tuesday to discuss Mr Whitelaw's contingency plans. There will be pressure to increase sanctions. The ultimate. stage would be to close prisons almost entirely and to do only absolutely essential tasks, such as allowing prisoners locked up without layatories to empty slops, and feeding them. Yesterday sources within the prison service said that about ten people of governor grade were being moved to Frankland from the prison service college at Wakefield, West Yorkshire and about ten more were coming from other areas...

Effect on crime of shorter sentences is negligible, Home Office study shows By Peter Evans Home Affairs Correspondent

Anxious watch is being kept for possible trouble from prisoners as the dispute over officers' pay for meal breaks reaches a new level of danger. So far officers are said not to have acted in a way that would seriously increase ten-sions in the less crowded but more potentially explosive top security prisons. The effects have been felt most in over-crowded local prisons and remand centres. That is in keeping with the officers' intention of bringing the population down to what is called the certified normal accommodation, an official yard- able way.

That re-presents a slight drop on Pri-day's figure of 3.328, partly be-cause of the reduction in flow from the courts and because some people sentenced for short periods will have been released. The curve upwards in the police cell population was expected to become less steep at some point giving Mr William Whitelaw, the Home Secretary, slightly more room for папоецуге. The most positive question arising from the dispute so far is whether the prison popula-tion could be cut to more manageable levels in an acceptsafe to say that the effect on the recorded crime rate would which makes a point now dram-atized in an unwelcome way by the present dispute. "There is now almost unamimous agreement that less, rather than more, use should be made of prisons", it says. One of the main purposes

The prospect he left them with was a bleak one: "... The deprivation of sacramental reconciliation with God should not prevent them from per-severing in prayer, penance and works of charity that they might find the grace of con-version and salvation".

On the question of birth control, which Pope Paul VI had pronounced against in his 1968 encyclical Humane Vitae, the Pope said that the synod had not overlooked the grave difficulties felt my many married couples but had "openly confirmed the validity and clear truth of the prophetic message, and profound meaning—pertaining to today's conditions—contained in the apprelical contained in the encyclical

It would not be polite to say that she left it too late, for she can move across the stage with presence and exhibits languid control that must have to do with confidence, but she managed to catch this particu-lar part by the very edge of plausibility. If she is to be the character schooled in charm, magnetic in beauty and growing with inno-cence, she should also perhaps be nearer the mark of 30. Her hair stylist, or wig consultant, has been helpful in emphasizing her handsome cheekbones, but the dress designs by Erre are for a much younger, woman and sabotage her charade by their very 1920s chic

In observing the manners of the play, she is not to be faulted, nor, is the director, Nigel Patrick, whose production

Such details place the their of a valuable necklace in the category of bad manners, and emphasize the vague amorality that Lonsdale was plundering. If his play has a hero, it is the roguish Lord Dilling, himself notorious for trifling with omen, drinking and gambling. What he has to his credit is style and a sense of humour, and Simon Williams does im-

To be sure, Mr Melkus and his friends use early instruments and bows, restored as closely as possible to their original state. Their mellow tone was well suited to Haydn's Divertimento in D for strings and two horns, and they would have been even more appropriate were it libr for Mr Melkus's curious insistence that the sound of aluminium would

Some of the tempos here and in the Mozart seemed a trifle unsteady, or perhaps undecided, but the bowing was always careful and the phrases beautifully shaped, showing much sensibility to eighteenth-century style. In the final analysis, Mr Melkus's sometimes idiosyncratic pursuit of authenticity is raised above the level of an academic exercise, for his play-ing, with all its contradictions, enriches our appreciation of the music. Some of the notes may fall by the wayside, others may be overshadowed by eccentricianticipation of dynamic markings, but the spirit of the music. largely intact.

Electra lost her second and and the choral and instrumental agitation and intensity; some movements, like Ilia's opening aria or the thirds act quartet, seemed fiercely driven. But Mr Hickox did well to hold the accompanied recitatives to gether so strongly, particularly with an orthestra less than fully professional. And the big risual scenes, believed by powerful choral singing, had real

There was a strong Idomeneus In Ambony Roden, persuasive in his first aria, accurate if pulmaginative in a curiously cut version of "Fuor del mar". Helen Walker made a fiery Electra; the sparks flew brilliantly in her final aria. Fiona Dobie phrased Ilia's music smoothly without suggesting much of warmth or gentleness; idemantes was properly and mamantes was properly and very cleanly sting at soprane pitch by Doreen O'Neill, but mains Mozart; retained Blectra's vioca more. Lysicism and expressive the voice is rather feminine and lent final outburst and part of ness suffered for the sake, of a touch shrill for a male role.

Novelties in lively context

With the best will in the world. place in which to find a festival of contemporary music. Yet such a thing has been thriving there now for three years, growing in size and sophistication, and gathering increasing audience support Of course the funds remain severely con-strained, but even so the festival has been able to present this year an extraordinary range of concerts and other events featuring especially the work of younger British composers, with a subsidiary slane towards Capricorn's concert on Friday night was a typically lively mixture: twentieth-century classics by Schoenberg, Ravel and Stravinsky (the Septet a ballet of clear, beautiful musical phrases), Tre per sette by Petravia a traing contentation for rassi, a trying conversation for three high woodwinds, but I suppose unavoidable as a noc to the doyen of Italian com-cosars, and John Casken's Firewhirl, which justly won high praise when it was introduced at the Bath Festival earlier this year. As on that occasion, Teresa Cahill was the scloist, responding warmly and generously to a work whose flickering images of flame and dance are set in a distinctive atmosphere of grim enigma.

Saturday morning's recital also had a soprano heroine. Jace Manning, who gave a duo programme with Barry Guy built around four recent British pieces for voice and bass. The combination might well have been expected to engender a sameness in the music, but this was not apparning was in exceptionally fine stand out from the four works was the continuing potency of Pierrot Lunaire as something composers feel they must deal with. Edward McGuire and Anthony Gilbert were discovered moon-gazing though admittedly the latter's Long White Moonlight spoke with an oriental blankness quite remote from Schoenberg, the voice a effects in the bass, whereas McGuire's Moonsongs chased in the shadows of the Schoenberg work, if with a defiant and dis turbing streak of childish obviousness. bewitched Nothing bewildered bewildered so in Nigel Osborne's Madelcine de la Ste-Baume, an incantation of holy rapture and sexual ecstasy composed of elements too composed of elements too ordinary and rhetorical to thake anything like a convincing image of the Magdalen in exile: a disappointing essay from a composer normally so imaginative. But the concert ended with a sure achievement in Edward Harper's the song of melitabel, a skilful cabaret turn that had Miss Manning peruked in Egyptian punk as Don Marquis's appalling feline.

Dennie Potter and his producer Kentit Trodd have not been exactly backward in coming for-ward since the well-merited sucress of Pennies from Heaven.
Revelling in their tempestions publicity they have encouraged the highest expectations of their forthcoming work. With a retrospective (again well-merited) at the National Film Theatre, and with the constant application of adjectives, like "leading "dis-tinguished" and "controver-sial" Potter has for the time being acquired the status of a sacred cow.

I point this out not in a spirit of mean iconoclasm but because it looks like having some bearing on the wature of the work itself. To accounts, I think, for the disturbing quality of the play which opened the current series last week, Blade on the Feather was a Rolls Royce production of a second hand Vauxhall Viva script. Potter knew hall Viva script. Potter knew he could rely on plenty of expensive surface gloss and he turned in a tesopently pretentious piece of mood-music to match.

Blackburn Rovers of the init of the last and playing slick, mature the title of fish to that other Notingham manager, Brian Clough, but the two men have something in common: successful football resums. Mr Clough is a natural headtine-maker, strident and provocative, whereas Mr Sirrel is reticent, preferring to let his players do the talking for him on the pitch. This approach has never worked as well for him as never worked as well for him as now.

Saturday night at the New London Theatre will be remembered for a situation comedy in the semi-final round of the world team snooker championship, sponsored by State Express. It was the night the busy Bill Weberniuk, of Canada, split the seam of his trousers while playing David Taylor, of England and held up play for 15 minutes.

Peals of laughter were heard play for 15 minutes.

Peals of laughter were heard when Werbenuk arose from his seat, trailing 30—63 in the second frame, to play his next shot. His embarrassment ended when he was escorted from the scene by his captain, Clif Thorburn, and the senior referre to the dressing room where repairs were carried out with a suimble needle and thread.

His absence exoked facetious with a suitable needle and interact.
His absence evoked facetious comment. "Come on Bill, we don't want this frame to end in a split decision." Another said that his lager had refreshed the parts which other beers cannot reach. Soon after his return he reach. Soon after ms return he forst his frame, having won the first, but took the third afer pulling himself out of several tight corners. Actions speak loudly for a muted Trevino

From Mitchell Platts
Barcelona, Oct 26
It requires something special to stop Lee Trevino these days, and neither a bomb hoax nor a stomach upset could destroy his determination to win the Johnnie Walker Trophy, at the El Prat course here today. Trevino, weakened by his sickness, drove the hall far shorter than normal course here today. Trevino, weakened by his sickness, drove the ball far shorter than normal but his sbort game was sharp and enabled him to piece together a fine 68, sufficient to win the £5,250 first prize with a 54 holes aggregate of 206, 10 under par.

When Trevino arrived at the course, he was warred not to go near the clubhouse which had been evacuated following an anonymous phone call to Tiburcio Rodriguez, the club director, that there was a bomb. Trevino had to wear his cadde's golf shoes on the practice range but police completed their intensive searth and gave the all clear just in time for him to retrieve his own shoes from the locker room and tee off.

From that point it should have been a simple matter of playing his normal game, but he felt so weak, that, by his own admission, he was unable to drive the ball as far as he would have liked in order to keep up with his playing partner and higgest threat. Sandy Lyle, and so when he drove Imo bankers and dropped shots at both the 13th and 14th, the tide of fortune appeared to have swung in the favour of the young British player.

Watching this convancing win by New Zealand's full-strength side was the Crystal Palace Football Chib director, Bill Williams, who said afterwards: "I have been impressed. I will put all the facts before the board this week. We are interested in a spectator sport on Sundays at Selhurst Park and Rugby League could fill the need. If we decide to go ahead, we would want to build our own team like Fulham and not take over an established club."

second half the captain, Graham, scored two tries and Coll one, and Smith completed five goals; Leeds scored a try through David Smith and a goal through Dick. Once again the Kiwis showed sufficient pace and skill to cause apprehension in Great Britain's training camp, where today Messrs Button and Whiteley will announce additions and replacements. and Whiteley will announce additions and replacements.

Castleford stayed on top of the league by winning at St Helens in a match controlled, not always to the crowd's liking, by a guest official from New Zealand, Kevin Steele. St Helens led 5—0 at half time with a try and a goal from Griffiths, but in a hard-fought second half Hyde and Beardmore scored tries for Castleford and Hyde kicked a goal.

Fulham's impressive progress continued before 7,000 spectators at Craven Cottage. They beat the leaders, York, 23—5 with a superb second-half performance, the highlight being an interception and 30 yard try-scoring run by the former Widnes centre, Aspey. The Fulham forward, Lester, carred an unwanted niche in history by becoming the first Fulham player to be sent off.

New Delhi, Oct 26.—Shekhar Mehta, of Kenya, was declared winner of the Himalayan car rally today. The event was called off with only 3,500km of the 5,300km course completed because of the actions of protesters, who twice stoned the cars. The demonstrators had claimed the rally was a waste of fuel and money.

Mehta, who drove an Opel Ascona, has won the East African Safari rally three times and is an experienced campaigner in long-distance events. His co-driver was Lofty Drews.

Return of JPR Williams will cause dismay outside Wales

Rugby Correspondent

J. P. R. Williams has been recalled by Wales to play full back in the international against New Zealand next Saturday. It is a highly significant choice, but not surprising in the light of several factors.

One is that the Welsh selectors One is that the Welsh selectors could not contemplate sticking by Roger Blyth after the largely harrowing game he had for Swansea on Saturday; another is that J. P. R. must remain the best full back in the Principalit; and a third is that the Welsh Rugby Union recently affirmed for a second time that they are wholly Union recently ariffmed for a second time that they are wholly satisfied about his amareur status after the publication of his auto-biography shortly before he aunounced his retirement from nternational football two seasons to reason why he should not be no reason why he should not be allowed to satisfy new ambitions. Now 31, he will equal Gareth Edwards's record of 53 caps for Wafes; but, as I suggested the other day, his return to the national side will dismay officials in other countries who believe that the publication of his book Quinnell has always been highly respected by the All Blacks While one arguably great performer is about to return to the international stage, a remarkably young one makes his bow. This is Robert Ackerman, of Newport, who will play on the left wing, with Elgan Rees on the other. Wales are desperately short of class players in this position and brayely they put their faith in a 19-year-old with a potential that is highly respected by the All Blacks and there can be little doubt that the Welsh selectors badly wanted to fit him in somewhere after to film out throughout last season: Their options were limited by a decision to play last season's captain, Squire, on a flank again and to give a first cap to the Bridgend and British Lions flanker, Gareth Williams, at No 8.

The rest of the side is as anti-cipated, with Steve Fenwick partnering David Richards in the forward, scored six tries against Gloucester two Saturdays ago—equalling a 58-year-old club record -and played as a late replacement in the recent B international against France. He is a former

If one takes for granted the recall on an open-side flamk of Paul Ringer, who was sent off in last season's match against England at Twickenham, it is difficult to see logic in the selection at lock, where two hard and splendid competitors, Geoff Wheel and Derek Quinnell, are

Yorkshire 16

Yorkshire wriggled out of yet another tough spot, this time at Mowden Park, Darlington, and at Durham's expense, though the losers had tackled with great gallantry and contributed much of the best rugby of the match.

The climax to the act came with Yorkshire trailing 7—12 and with only 10 minutes left. A pleasant left-to-right passing movement broke on Durham's fine defence but Davenport won the ruck for Yorkshire and the hall was spun back to Barley in the centre. He attempted a diagonal chip for Squires on the right wing but the ball struck a Durham boot, popped up obligingly and Cardus trotted over for the softest of tries which Old converted, earning a single point lead which Yorkshire in-creased through a late penalty

By Michael Seely The result of the William Hill Futurity at Doncaster on Satur-day merely confirmed what had day merely confirmed what had already seemed likely—that Storm Bird and To-Agori-Mou are 10lb in front of any other two-year-olds trained in England or Ireland. And as far as the 2,000 Guineas is concerned William Hill's prices which thake them first and second favourite with 20-1 on offer against any other candidate seems a fair reflection of the situation.

Their view is shared by Beldale Flutter's astute fraincr. Michael Jarvis. Beldale Flutter landed a nice little touch for connexions. Jarvis said that the colt hated the firm ground when finishing a close fourth to Robellino in the Royal Lodge Stakes and that he had been fairly confident of going close on Saturday. However, Jarvis is now considering bypassing Newmarket and keeping Beldale Flutter in reserve for the Irish 2,000 Guineas. Recitation by passing Newmarket and keeping Beldale Flutter in reserve for the Irish 2,000 Guineas. Recitation and Robellino ran well helow their hest. Recitation booked a pictore of health in the paddock, but he was struggling a long way out and could finish only fourth. Probably his trip to Paris and his hard race in the Grand Critérium took more out of the Elecutionist colt than had been thought, something it is difficult to find out on the gallops.

Robellino was one of the list to be betten and finished last but fo find out on the gallops.
Robellino was one of the first to he beaten and finished last but one. There was plenty of confidence behind the Royal Lodge Stakes winner in the market. But it had been possible during the past week to sense that Ian Balding had not been too happy. He knew that Robellino had sturted to turn in his coat and despite the Roberto colt's excellent homework this is never a good sign.

The significant performance as far as the future is concerned was that of Shergar. On the morning of January 11th 1978, you might have been forgiven for mistaking the streets of Sheerness for Amsterdam or Venice.

After a night of near hurricane force winds and waves as high as houses, the East Kent coastline was, quite simply, blown to bits.

In the light of this thirty mile trail of devastation, it became clear to us at Commercial Union that there was only one way we could be of real help.

Not with tea and sympathy. Or vague promises of compensation.

But rather, by agreeing to claims immediately. On the spot.

Now, it's not every day you'll find us popping in on policy holders, with a view to popping a cheque in the post.

After all, like any other insurance company, every claim we deal with involves certain formalities.

There are details to be noted down. Policies to be checked out of a crisis.

out Assessments to be made. And so on.

A process that can take anything from five minutes to five months. Or even longer, Speaking for ourselves, we prefer to simplify the paperwork, for the sake of a speedy settlement.

Which is precisely how we coped with the mopping up of East Kent.

On January 12th, with the storm damage barely a day old, we set up an emergency claims centre in Canterbury Within two working days we had our own team of claims inspectors out and about on the waterways, personally totting up the cost of repairs.

In all, we paid out £115,000 from just one branch, to more than 400 policy hol- C ders.

So they could start ASSURANCE rebuilding their lives, while others were still getting estimates.

Why President Carter has clearly proved his Museum reading room is a sure way of reaping a harvest of raised evebrows and dark suspicions about the singer's evident title to his marbles. To assert that Mr Carter is a fine president of the United States, deserves a second term on his merits and should be supported on November 4 even if Mr Reagan cre not the alternative is another.

But let it be asserted, for it is so. For a start he has a number of elementary qualities which are early taken for granted but are by no means shared by the great present. Indeed, they may be regarded as historically abnormal. Mr Carter is not senile, powercrazed, corrupt, stupid, indolent, reactionary, oppressive or megalo-maniac, He is not even a male tracy exceptionally intelligent, inhomanly hard-working, profoundly, liberal in his instincts, a democrat to his fingertips, genuinely comthe poor honest, healthy anddeployed-capable of brilliant wit. Less platitudinously, he happens to be solidly in layour of the things, in which most readers of this not wish to go to war with Russia, to lead a global crusade against communism or to give unquestioning knee-jerk: support to every miserable despot who claims to see the hand of Marx in the slightest local resistence to his regime.

He prefers and that achieved normal relations with China has defused the Panama Canal issue, has by Camp David at least pre-vented the present Gulf conflict spreading to the Near East and has put both human lights and non-proliferation of nucleor weapons on the respectable against of international affairs. He has consistently confronted the coughest underlying issues in each region of the

At the same time he understands better than most the essential-quality of the United States and the West's relationship with the Soviet Union and its empire: Both have to inhabit the same globe without destroying it or each other. But neither can afford to allow torial, political or economic gains at the expense of the other. Both cooperation and competition are inherent in the global situation: and any American leader who neglects either is dangerous.

Many Carter critics claimed not to be able to tell whether he was really hawk or dove and in strict dove before Afghanistan to hawk thereafter. This illustrates nothing but the critics limited intelligence. If they had paid attention to Mr

Carter's speech at Amapolis in early 1978 they would have had no difficulty in predicting his reaction to Afghanistan. Nor would they have eeded to be so wilfully blind to the manifest consistency of seeking to coexist sensibly with the Russians—by way of Salt, a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty and understandings on arms control and other matters—so long as Russian behaviour justified it and of their reacting very firmly when, flagrantly violated the implicit code

right to a second term

Indeed, impredictability is; per-haps, the least justified of all the charges against Mr Carter's presi-dency. For those who find it difficult to foresee what he will do there is a simple and almost always reliable rule of thumb; assume that he will choose the least politically attractive option open to him.

Indeed it has for long been standard practice in the Wine House when it is desired to steer the President in the direction of one of, say, four options, to list prominently the political advantages of the other three courses. This goes back to the nine when, early in his administration, his comment on a administration, his comment on a voluntaries memorandum, replete with opinion poll data; urging on him the political need to reverse a number of important politics, was "Don't chicken out". From my observation he is the most unpolitical politician of modern times, although—which is something quice different-he knows a thing or two about elections.

At the same time Mr Carter has riven high priority to strengthening the West in the ways that really matter—the political cohesion and cost-effectiveness of Nato. The reversal of the previous decline in defence spending and the plugging of the gap in the alliance's theatre nuclear defences. If he did not always get the response he sought the fault was seldom his. At the same time he bravely resisted the blandishments of what President Eisenhower called the "military industrial complex" to fund-glamorous weapon-systems whose military justification was dupious.

ceed with the neutron bomb not only reflected substantial expert donbts about its superiority to con-ventional alternatives as a defence against massed tank attack and the real danger of starting a dangerous new round in the arms race; it was also justified by the steadfast—though intreported and unadmisted—refusal of the European leaders at that time to support to deploy at that finise to support 105 deployment in the only meaner. It which is could be used, namely Europe. More generally Mr. Carer, has seen and practised, the proper synthesis of the old argument between geopolitical Realpolitic and regional on lighterament, namely to make the latter the institutions of the latter the institutions of the proper synthesis.

in Africa, where he sturdily resists hysterical pressures to read to superficted energies of events in the Rose of Africa and Zaire by reinjecting a crude Dollesstyle East West chorension into African affairs. He also majored out with great foresight in July 1977 the essential diplomatic suff polytical strategy for bringing Rindelia to negotiated indictionation with the strategy and most skillfully fallighted by Lord Carrington at Larranger House.

Die it will be objected, if he is so westlerful why is the world in such a mess and why does he stand stich a mess and ton does he state in such low estern of home and abroad? The short animal is be-cause, as argued in this space before the President of the United which work began 212 years ago and will be completed in 1986. It statted when Captain Cook sailed from Plymouth on his first momentous voyage of discovery on August 25, 1768. He was accompanied in the Endeavour by Joseph Banks who, at his own expense, had engaged a working party. It in-cluded the botanist Dr. Solander, and two draughtsmen, of whom 23-year-old Sydney Parkinson was to be responsible for the objects of natural history.

The ship called at many places including Madeira, Rio de Janeiro, Tierra del Fuego and the Society Islands and made prolonged stays in Austra-lia and New Zealand. At each landing Banks, Solander and their assistants collected speci-

When Parkinson could not complete a water colour before the fresh specimen had wilted and faded he made a quick outline field sketch in pencil, colouring in just enough detail for accurate completion later aided by observations in writing, normally on the back of cach sheet of paper. Before he died of fever on the way home he had completed 280 out of more than 900 drawings. The system enabled five other artists to finish the work in Eritain under the supervision of Banks and Solander with the aid of the pressed and dried

The project is not just a commercial venture, for there are easier ways of both making and losing money. It requires, as Joseph Banks himself found out, a strong financial base, firm ture of, 40 tons of Somerset mould-made paper, the gathering together of many craftsmen with varied skills, and finally the circumspect and well-informed approach to libraries and collectors so that they may be ready, and even anxious, to take up and pay for all the years of thought and skill and work.

Being friendly with the Chinese can pay off in Tibet

Two days drive north sheer mountainside high in the wilderness of Tibet, a row of huge Chinese characters picked out in white stones proclaims to an empty world: "Long live Charman Mao."

It is probably the world's least effective advertisement hoarding, for few but the eagles and the Chinese army pass this way. It is also out of date; most of the adulatory logans and portraits of Man have gone from Peking. News takes longer to reach this most desolate region of the whole of China, 1,500 miles west of the capital, bigger than the whole of western Europe but with half the population of Ireland. In May of this year the Chinese government admitted with unusual candour that its efforts to manage the economy of Tibet had been little short of disastrous. China annexed it in 1950, purged it of its medieval theocratic rule and intro-duced the first wheeled transport to its capital, Lhasa, in 1954. But the Tibetans are an entirely different race, and they have never regarded the Chinese as other than occupiers who neither understood nor greatly cared for this mountain land.

Preparing for better times From Sir Ian Morrow

Sir. When the noturn in economic industrial activity comes about there will be a recurrence of two prob lems which have plaqued British industry in the past, a shortage of skilled manpower and a shortage of capacity, resulting in excessive imports and lost export orders. Nevertheless, if intelligent action is taken in the near future both prob-lems could be alleviated.

I visited the United States recently and found that, with subsidies from local authorities, companies were setting up training achemes to upgrade semi-skilled workers to skilled workers, and thereby avoid the bottleneck of shortage of skilled labour. The Engineering Employers' Federation have repeatedly suggested that it should he possible for men to enter into apprenticeships at any age. This proposal has not been adopted Unless some scheme is evolved whereby mature men can be trained and accepted as skilled men, the same bottleneck will recur. Whenever a shortage of capacity arises it is always blamed on under investment. In the United States and Germany, factories (other than continuous process factories) are expected to work on a double-day shift system. In this country they are expected to work eight hours a day. It is obvious, compared with our competitors, we are under-using our investments, and if we follow their example we would have a much wider manufacturing base than is realised.

Trial and death of

Lady Barnett From Mr. J. J. Smyth. QC

Sir. Is it not time a note of realism was injected into your correspon-dence about the tragedy of Lady Barnett?

First, let those who complain about elderly ladies being subjected to the full rignurs of the law under-stand that it was Lady Barnett who rhose to be tried by judge and jury at the Crown Court. The prosecution are always content for shoplifting cases to be tried summarily.

Secondly, in all cases of theft the judge will direct the jury that forgetfulness or inadvertence is a full direct content.

defence to the charge. Deliherate dishonesty, with the specific intent permanently to deprive the owner, must always be proved-

What is more, it is always open to the defence to call medical evidence relevant to the accused's state of mind. Lady Barnett, as a former magistrate, and her advisers would of course have known this. The jury, which consisted no doubt of 12 persons who go shopping most days of their lives, unanimously conricted her.

Finally. I hope that those who want "trial" by a panel of psychiatrists or anything akin will think again. It is fundamental to the rule of law in a democratic society that when a criminal offence is alleged. the accused is entitled to be tried according to law in a court of justice. To deprive a citizen of this right is to remove him from the the hands of technical experts who know nothing of justice and punishment but only compulsory "cure is but a short step from there to the hospital wards of the Siberian

The late Professor C. S. Lewis nut it so well as long ago as 1949 in his article " The Humanitarian theory of punishment". I quote:

The Humaniterian theory wants simply to abolish justice and substitute mercy for it. This means that you start being "kind" to people hefore you have considered their rights, and then force upon them supposed kindnesses which no one but you will recognise as kindnesses and which the recipient will feel as abominable cruelties. Mercy, detached from justice, grows unmerciful."

The Romans in Britain From Mr Edward Shackleton

Sir, I wish to challenge the validity the two principles enunciated by Mr Geoffrey Strachan in his letter today (October 20). It is most important that everyone should understand what is involved, for much is at stake.

First, I absolutely deny the offrepeated plaint that no one should criticize a play or film unless they have seen it. On the contrary, I hold that if certain scenes play are adequately described in the words of a review, there is no reason at II why I should go and see it before declaring that it is not fit to be performed, unless, of course, those responsible for its production categorically deny the very substance of the report. The word "obscene" means originally "off-stage", or unfitting to be performed, and there the matter ends. Niceties as to how the thing was done are irrelevant. Under Mr Strachan's argument no one should decide that a play is not fit to be seen until they have seen it! This may be good for the box office but, somehow, it does not seem to me tu make sense. It is even more necessary to challenge the second of Mr Strachan's principles. As I under-stand it he is suggesting that what goes on in the National Theatre is none of my business unless, of course, I am a theatregoer.

course, I am a theatregoer.

It is, on the contrary, a principle inherent in society that what is allowed in public places of entertainment inevitably involves, and therefore is a matter of concern to, all the members of that society. What a man does in his own bedroom in private is no special concern of mine, if for no other reason. cern of mine, if for no other reason than that, so long as it is really done in private and so long as he does not talk about it in public. I obviously know nothing about it— so how could it worry me? So long as I remain a member of this present society I cannot escape being involved with what goes on in public. I must make allowance for much that I do not like but others do like. But there comes a point at which I must draw the line and the fact that I never go to public places of entertainment is irrelevant. Unless I wish to be associated with such performances I must either declare against them or remove myself from that society. Yours sincerely,

EDWARD SHACKLETON. The Flat. Cobb's Farm. North Moreton, Oxfordshire.

From Mr Roger Baker

Sir, A depressing aspect of the discussion in your columns is that none of your correspondents has men tioned the actual issues raised by the two plays in question.
I have not seen Howard Brenton's play, but I have seen Alan Bennett's and found its exploration of the complex web of human responsibility, its treatment of old age, of relationships and of life-expecta-tions unnerving, shocking in a very positive sense.

Could it be that those who are busy condemning these plays are creating a diversionary tactic: blaming as it were, the singer because the song is too distressing for them to confront?

Oil and the Third World: why a new deal is so necessary this decade most nations, rich and poor alike, face a harsher substantially to the difficulties . economic climate than has been seen for a generation.

The problems which confront the international community are familiar enough: low economic growth, mounting Third World debts, rising oil prices, huge "petrodollar" surpluses, increasing population, regional food scarcities andencapsulating all this widening income disparities between the world's rich and very poor

Yer, as the problems have become more acute, so the willingness and ability of the industrial countries, the oil industrial countries, the oil exporting group and the other developing nations to make common cause in searching for solutions has ebbed away. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (Opec) and North America, western Europe and Japan, are content to blame each other for the world's woes. Each group believes it is the responsibility of the other to come to the aid of the oil importing developing countries. importing developing countries. who are suffering badly in the

Their aggregate current account deficit has grown from 57,000 million in 1973 to more than $70,000 million this year and according to the World Bank will rise to well in excess of $100 million by the end of the decade (although inflation will reduce the real burden of this deficit). At the same time the total outstanding debts of nearly 100 developing countries rose almost six-fold during the 1970s to a massive $376,000. million.

that every $1 increase in the price of a barrel of oil adds $2,000 million to the aggregate deficit of the oil importing Third World nations. Their total oil bill rose about $35,000 million between 1978 and 1980. Even countries with mineral exports now have to export five times as much to pay for each barrel of hil as they did in cross-fire.

"Precisely"

The way most manufacturers talk you'd be right in thinking that a great deal of the high-flown hi-fi jargon used is little more than a lot of hot air. We ought to know.

Because basically all we've done to make our new Mini Hi-Fi receiver and cassette deck as good, if not better, than the typical, maxi hi-fi equivalent is to take out the hot air.

Hot and otherwise.

In other words, having spent a lot of time researching all the various features that many people consider essential to quality hi-fireproduction, we found quite a few that weren't.

and easier recording we, of course, kept. Some, like the controls of the cassette deck, we made simpler. Which is why you don't have to press stop every time you want to change from rewind to fast forward or play.

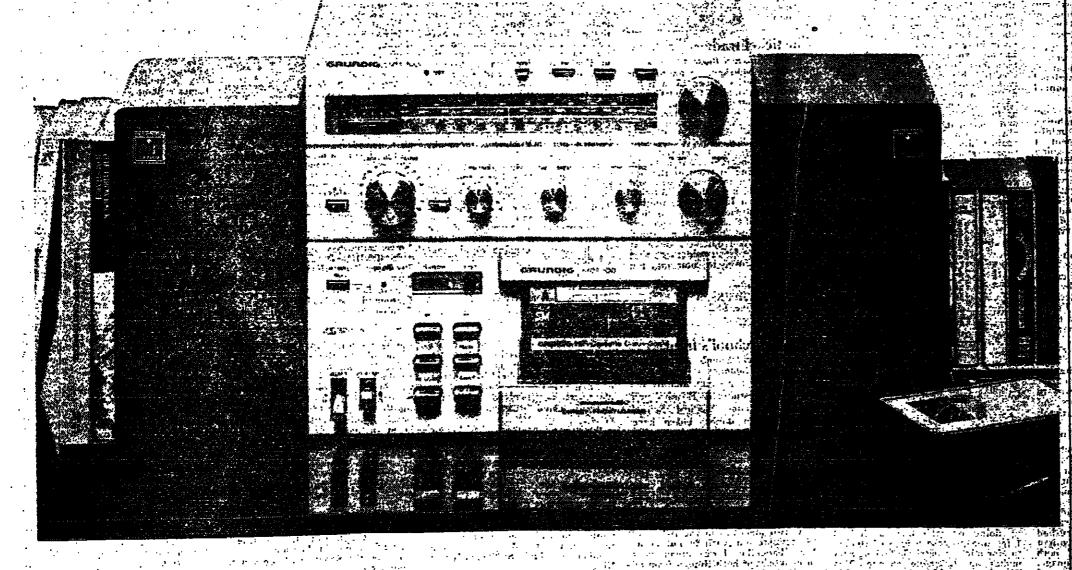

Other features we made smaller.

Likethespeakers, which while almost literally pint-sized, pack quite a punch.

Looked at one way, the result is a quality hi-fi system that sounds a great deal better than most music centres without costing a great deal more.

Looked at another way, the Grundig Mini Hi-Fi is every little bit as good as any maxi hi-fi you might be tempted to buy. Except that it's half the size, anything up to half the price and you don't need a degree to GRUNDIG make the most of it.

The muddle over faith and man's salvation

By Clifford Longley Religious Affairs Correspondent

The generally accepted meaning of the word faith is that it stands for an irrational leap in the dark against the evidence of mind and senses, for which the reward is a cosy feeling of virtue and self-satisfaction described by words like righteousness, redemption and regeneration.

Thus, to the non-religious, do religious people distance themselves, from the depravity of the unrighteous; and count themselves superior beings, "bora again". The basic integrity of the unrighteous refuses to believe in a god who permits such a performance. The argument about that dressed in the theological language of the time, was the pivot of the Reformation. Yet the Reformation was essentially a rejection by the original Protestants of central idea. It was in that area of doctrine, above all, that the Church of Rome had strayed, they maintained, by offering man the chance of elf-salvation. And Rome replied with a solemn anathema of the same doctrine, denying the belief logical community unreservedly

It was an extraordinary muddle, as perverse an exercise in misunderstandings and cross purposes as could be imagined. Each was accusing the other of virtually the same heresy, that God could be bribed to bestow salvation by virtuous acts, of faith or of morals.

The discovery of that strange historical paradox could not happen until certain pioneering spirits felt confident enough to break the taboos which pre-vented a fair appraisal of the Reformation in a detached and scholariy way.

Karl Barth, one of the greatest Calvinist writers of the century, compiled a monumental treatise called Church Dogmatics; and Hans Kung, then unknown and long before his celebrated clashes with church authority, made it the subject of a thesis, A Catholic Reflection on the Doctrine of Kurl Barth. Barth.

Both sides were somewhat shocked. Catholic theologians waited to see if Barth would repudiate Kung's representation of his teachings, and Barth produced a foreword for the thesis endorsing it. Protestants waited for the disciplinary and theological thunderbolts to be hurled at Kung's head.

Yet the Roman Catholic theoin practice, at least three types of neutrinos are now recognized, corresponding to the three electron-like particles now known—the electron itself and the analogous but heavier "mu" and "tan" mesons.

One consequence of the theory that the neutrinos may be massive is that the three different types should spontaneously be converted into each other with the passage of time. Earlier this year, Dr F. W. Reines from the University of California claimed that he had detected this interconversion process in an experiment mounted close to a nuclear reactor near the Savan.

a nuclear reactor near the Savan-nah River power plant in the Uni-ted States, but the original inter-pretation of that experiment has been disputed and the measure-ments are being repeated.

Theoreticians seem to be sufficiently confident of their calculations to be undeterred. Dr De Rujula and Dr Glashow start from the assumption that a substantial part of the mass of the universe, and of individual galaxies, consists of the mass of neutrinos emitted in various nuclear processes since the beginning of time.

The good sense of this assump-tion stems from observations of the movement of hydrogen gas within galaxies like our own, which suggests that the true mass of the galaxy is roughly 10 times that that man could save himself by praised his statement of the his own choice, even if all he position as no less than what chose was faith.

Catholics turned to Luther to see what he had really said, and Protestants turned to the Council of Trent and the history of the period. They found that "Justification by faith alone" was not exclusively Protestent, nor did Rome teach justification by good works.

The greatest surprise await-The greatest surprise awaiting the Protestant investigators was that Luther had been rejected, in effect, for allegedly teaching the very thing he denied, in essence for making faith a "great work" by which man could buy his salvation. Both sides had undoubted!

been holding to what each sew as the crucial teaching: man is not saved by his own effort, because God has done it for him already. The idea of a god who can be induced to effer salvation in reward for merit is a false idea and an such is a false idea, and no such god exists. Those and related issues, apparently obscure in their theological and historical context, are raised and brilliantly discussed in a new book by four woung Evangelical Anglicans, who press their demand that "justification by faith", to give its technical name, should receive the attention due to it. What still gives the historical drama of the Reformation its permanent capacity to overshadow the present is the fact that the essential questions, whether posed in religious or secular language, cannot be avoided.

The child who knows he is loved by parents because of who he is and not because of how he behaves, grows up same and stable and will make good relationships, the child who is manipulated into earning manipulates into earning approval and learns to gain affection by manipulation in return, grows up with a cripping emotional handicap that will mar his relationships and deprive him of any deep or secure sense of his own or secure sense identity.

To love, one has first to be accept and value loved; to accept and value oneself, one has first to be accepted and valued. But those without a strong and relaxed conviction of their own "right to be" cannot award it to to be cannot award it to themselves; if they try to do so, thinas are made worse. They cannot demand it from others, and if they try to do so, things are worse still.

And yet it is there all the time: the difference is between knowing it and not bross.

tween knowing it and not knowing it. The distance between the two. from not knowing it to knowing it, is the abyse that is leapt by faith. But there seems to be no adequate secular answer to the question that then arises: how is that to be done?

Distinguished service in two world wars

Vice-Admiral Robert Don Oliver, CB, CBE, DSC, DL, who died on October 6 at the age of 85, was the son of Col. William Oliver, Lochside, Roxburghshire and nephew of Admiral of the Fleet Sir Henry Oliver. He was educated at Osborne and Dartmouth Naval Colleges and served throughout both world wars. He was present at the Battle of the Falkland Islands in 1914 and served with distinction in the operations in the Dardanelles in 1915. For the rest of the war he served in rest of the war he served in HMS Murray and HMS Telemachus and took part in many mine-laying operations off the German and Belgian coasts. His commanding officer on both these ships was Commander Taprell Dorling who under the name of "Taffrail" wrote a number of books of naval life of which The Sub is a record of Robert Oliver's life at that time.

Robert Oliver's life at that time. For his services in the first war Oliver was awarded the DSC. After the war Oliver attended the Naval Staff College at Greenwich and in 1922 served aboard HMS Renown when she carried the Prince of Wales on his world cruise After a number of postings in the 1920s he was gazetted commander in 1930 and captain in 1936. From 1936 to 1938 he was in New Zealand serving as second naval member of the Defence Committee. In 1939 he was re-called to Britain to take com-mand of the old battleship HMS from Duke and played an important role in improving the defences of Scapa Flow after the sinking of HMS Royal Oak y a German U-Boat. In 1940 Oliver took command of the Devonshire in which it was his duty to escort convoys between Freetown and Simonstown. While engaged in the defence of the Cape trade route he hun-ted down and sank a German surface raider, the disguised merchant ship Atlantis, which had been responsible for sinking over a quarter of a million tens of Allied shipping.

Returning to Britain Oliver took command of HMS Excellent, the Naval Gunnery School at Whole Island and in 1944 commissioned the cruiser HMS Swiftsure and was in the Far East at the end of hostili ties. In 1945 he was promoted Rear-Admiral and became Assistant Chief of Naval Staff (Weapons) and in 1946 Deputy Chief of Naval Staff, In 1947 he became Flag Officer Commanwhich was based on Hongkons. He was placed on the retired fist and promoted Vice-Admiral in 1948.

Oliver's retirement was see at Lochside in the foothills of the Cheviot, where he deligh sed in forming land that had been in his family's norsession for almost two centuries. Of an active and inventive disnosition he was never satisfied an active part in every farming operation. In particular he operation. In particular he liked to tend his woodlands and built a sawyard in which he sawed the tumber for a multitude of purposes aroun the farm. In 1968 he retired from active participation farming but continued to live at Lockside where he devoted his time to writing carpentry last he was extending to his hire of bees when he suffered stroke that brought about his death three days later.

Zurawley was very fond of reminiscing about the old competitions, and I well remem-ber him saving that, of all the first prizewinners that he remembered. Martha Argerich was the most impressive. Perhaps this choice reflected his own leaning towards extreme technical accomplishment.

His pupils looked on him with affection and admiration; during his life he contributed a great deal to the music-life of twentieth century Poland.

Budget anger From Our Parliamentary

Westminster, Monday.-The Opposition gave Mr Butler's autumn Budget speech today one of the noisiest receptions suffered by any Chancellor of the Exchequer any Chancellor of the Exchequer for many years. When he sat down they bombarded him and the Government with a clamour of "Resign", and they took the unusual step of dividing against the Budget resolution increasing the rates of purchase tax. There were many occasions when the noise drowned Mr Butler's voice and made it necessary for him to repeat phrases. Undoubtedly the repeat phrases. Undoubtedly the sharpest Opposition anger was directed at the checks he announced on the volume of government lending to local authorates and on the general increase in the rates of purchase tax, particularly his proposal to bring kitchenware and other household goods within the range of the tax. Mr Attice was scathing later about what he called the Government's hatred of was scathing later about what he called the Government's habred of young married couples. Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition raised the only really resounding laugh of the afternoon when he pictured a young married couple sitting without any furniture in a room looking saddy at their cut room looking sadly at their cut glass and silverware — on which the Chancellor proposed to relax purchase tax.

Since the existence of the particles called neutrinos was first postulated on theoretical grounds nearly half a century ago, it has been supposed that they are literally devoid of mass. In that respect, as well as their capacity to carry different amounts of energy and momentum, neutrinos have thus resembled particles of light, called photons.

Unlike photons, however, neutrinos (witch have no electric charge) interact only weakly with more familiar particles of matter and are thus detectable only with great difficulty.

venting its indefinite expansion.

The detection of this invisible missing mass will plainly be a difficult task. With the passage of time, heavy neutrinos should be converted into light neutrinos with the emission of ultraviolet light. Whether this would be detectable would depend on the lifetime of the heavy neutrinos, which is estimated at not less than a million times the present estimate of the age of the universe (10,000 million years).

On the assumptions made in the

On the assumptions made in the calculation, however, the numbers of neutrinos tied up with galaxies should be so great that they should be detectable with sensitive instruments as a faint glow surrounding each galaxy. West Germany agrees to compromise on European steel production quotas

Objections by West Germany to EEC Commission plans to control community steel production appeared last night to have been overcome after lengthy meetings in Brussels. Representatives of the special

This pro-posal had been raised by Dr Otto Lambsdorff, the West German economics minister, at the previous day's Council of Ministers meeting in Luxem-

A further meeting of the Council of Ministers will take place there on Thursday. The British Government, which was represented by Mr Adam Butler, Minister of State for Industry, insisted that special steels be included in the regime to protect the interests of largely privately owied producers near Sheffield.

"The United Kingdom has to stand firm on special steels being included in the quota plan", Mr Butler said after the meeting. While Prance took a similar hard line, the British delegation was most explicit in insisting on a quota system for

But after yesterday's talks, the basis of a compromise agreement which would be acceptable to the Bonn Government and at the same time ensure that special steels were included in the control measures was reached.

Last night Mr Selwyn Williams, a director of the British Independent Steel Pro-ducers Association, said: "After today's meetings we believe that we are near to a solution which will meet objections raised by Dr Lambsdorff and

The West German delegation accepted the need for compulsory production quotas, and the threat of a German veto seems to have receded into the background. The German insistence that special steels should be exempted from quotas and Bonn's argument that such a quota regulation would hurt Germany's small and medium producers puzzled representatives of British steel producers lobbying the meeting.

Of these the still open question of special steels was the most important. But the Ger-mans also sought, and obtained, the exemption from quotas of steel produced as a raw material for wide diameter tubes, tin plate and rails,

In return Bonn backed down on a demand that the proposed quota arrangement should run only until the end of March 1981, whereas the Commission had proposed article 58 should operate until the end of June next year. The Germans also agreed not to press for the exemption of reinforcing bars from the quote system.

Saturday's meeting appears to have been rather more amiable than had been expected. Dr. Lambsdorff described Viscount Davignon's clarifications of the Commission's plan as "positive, sensible and satisfying". The Commission in turn pleased the Germans by admitting that it would like to see a much more rigorous control of state aids in the industry.

Mr Butler made clear that his patience was wearing a little thin. "As far as I am con-cerned, it has got to end next week", he said, referring to the delays that have held up the steel quota scheme since eight FEC member states agreed on the Commission's plan on October 7.

Restraint urged on closed shop changes

By David Felton Labour Reporter

Continuing differences be-tween senior industrialists on draft codes of conduct on picketing and the closed shop by the Institute of Personnel Management's submission to the Government on the proposed legislation.

The view of the IPM, which has 21,000 members engaged daily in industrial relations problems, is that more sweeping proposals being urged in some quarters "would only create unnecessary tensions and indusrial relations difficulties for British companies and their management. In the current economic climate, company viability and its consequences for employment are overriding priorities."

More restrictive control of trade unions has recently been suggested by, among others, the Institute of Directors and the Centre for Policy Studies, the Conservative Party's "think tank".

The period of consultation on the draft codes ended earlier this month. Mr James Prior, Secretary of State for Employment, is studying submissions from interested parties and deciding whether to make any changes in the codes before laying them before Parliament next month. At the same time he is expected to produce a Green Paper discussing fur-ther action which could be taken on trade union immuni-

The IPM's submission, which has just been published suggests that there should be a section in the codes dealing with the role of the employer. "This section could advise on particular steps which would establish the nature of the dispute. It remains the IPM's overall view that the government legislation codes appropriately tackle some of those abuses by trade union members which give rise to much public concern", the submission says.

The need for restraint in approaching the closed shop was emphasized by several speakers at the IPM's national conference in Harrogate which ended at the weckend. In a paper to the conference Mr Clifford Rose, board member for industrial relations at British Rail, argued that "the increase originates are an increase or an increase or a second s criticism of the principle of the closed shop comes from people with no direct experience of its operation within industry".

British Rail is attempting to renegotiate its closed shop agreement with the three rail unions in view of the provisions of the Employment Act and the recent decision by the European Commission of Human Rights that the dismissal of three employees for not belonging to one of the rail unions breached the convention of human rights.

Mr Rose agreed that there and been some difficult and had been "some difficult and distasteful episodes in the closed shop history, but it would be unfortunate if, in trying to tackle these aspects, we swept away the good with the bad".

St Cuthbert's might invest f6m in new store development He saw problems in the Commission's finding and asked whether it was too fanciful to suggest that the argument could be extended to store in the central area of Edinburgh are successful. It expects to fund this investment any case of dissuasion from joining or forming a trade union, or whether an employer's refusal to recognize a of individuality by retaining its own board after the merger lar violation of the convention.

UK may join Third World summit

Britain is a conspicuous absentee from the group of 10 countries who will "cosponsor" next year's proposed summit meeting of leaders from rich and poor nations.

But both France and West Germany are among the coindicating cleariy President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt are throwing their considerable political weight behind the summit initiatire

The apparent determination of important governments that the summit should go ahead has prompted Britain to declare its willingness to attend, without qualification, if invited. Hitherto, the Government has insisted that it would only attend if it was satisfied that the summit had been properly Despite firm depials from the Foreign Office there has been a widely held suspicion that Britain was trying to sabotage the so-called "Brandt summit". It was the report of the Brandt Commission, published earlier this year, that originally proposed such a meeting, aimed at trying to resolve some of the issues that blight relations be-tween the world's rich northern countries and the poor developing pations of the south. Britain has faced considerable

The cosponsors group includes five countries from the north and five from the south. As well as France and West Germany, they are Canada, Sweden, Austria, Mexico, India, Nigeria, Algeria and Yugoslavia.
Ministers and top officials from these countries will meet Vienna on November 7 and to decide the full composition of the summit meeting, the date on which it will be held, the place and the agenda. It is expected that foreign ministers or their deputies from at least four of the cosponsors will attend some part of the Vienna meeting, including Herr Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the German foreign minister. Apart from Britain, nther notable absentee the cosponsors group is the

the latter may be the impending American presidential election. Although it will be clear by the time of the Vienna meeting who has won the election, it could be several months before a clear United States policy towards the Third World emerges if Mr Ronald Reagan were to form the next administration stration.

At the same time, there is no doubt that Britain and the United States are perceived by many countries to be the most negative and unconstructive o the industrialized block in their approach to the North-South

Officially it is argued that the exclusion of Britain from the early summit preparations is simply a reflection of its declining political and eco-nomic influence in the world. But the country's more insular foreign policy and its "hawkish" attitude in nego-tiations with the Third World may also help to explain why it was not asked to help sponsor the summit

Last night, Mr John Mitchel the director of the World Development Movement, Britain's main aid pressure group. said it was hardly surprising that Britain had been left standing on the sidelines.

The federation's call comes at a point when the profession is urging Sir Keith Joseph, Secretary of State for Industry, to ensure there is a majority chartered engineers on the new body's governing council.

This looks likely to cause a clash with employer organiza-tions like the Engineering Employers' Federation (EEF) and the Confederation of British Industry because the EEF, par-ticularly, would like to see at east half the governing council representing industry.

The Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors suggests that a balance of membership between experienced profes-sional engineers and experienced employers is right. It is difficult to see any sources of stimulus for the United States economy in 1981. To suggest that the rate of economic growth in America may be nil or a mere I per cent next year is realistic rather than pessimistic.

Both candidates are advocating similar tax cutting programmes and the return of what is likely to be a fairly conservative Congress will guard against any introduction of large tax reductions. At most, tax cuts of about $30,000m (about £12,145m), spread throughout the coming year, are likely.

Such cuts are not so significant when set within the context of over $620,000m of tax revenues collected in America in 1981. Indeed, if unemployment in the United States next year was to be 5 per cent, rather than a more probable 8 per cent, then even with the tax cuts, the 1981 budget would be in sur-cies as mere election strategy.

and more economists appear to be accepting. It is an outlook that assumes no further serious inflationary shocks. Such an assumption, of course, is highly dangerous and it is for this very reason that many look abead with marked trepidation. The severe summer drought will have bitter consequences for food prices, as the latest in-flation data is already indicating. Indexed wages are securing high wage rises, with an average 9 to 91 per cent rate so far this year. High mortgage rates are boosting the consumer price index and productivity in America continues to register minus points, These inflation and productivity trends are likely to con-tinue well into 1981. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries might impose higher oil price levels, not just because of disruptions to supplies caused by the Iraq-Iran war, but also because of the rising cost of Opec imports. The International Monetary Fund has predicted a 12.5 per cent inflation rate in Opec countries. The removal of some oil price control in the United States next year will add at least 10 to 12 per cent to refined pro-duct prices, contributing another level. In terms of interest rates, inflation, employment and growth, 1981 will be a bleak year for America, brightened only by the prospect of consistent anti-inflation policies which could provide a base for future price stability in late

than the level expected in the spring and well above last year's DM47,000m level.

It will be up to Herr Matthöfer to draw up a budget for next year that convinces parliament and the federal states and municipalities that Bonn is serious when it talks about the need to consolidate public finances.

In. the government policy negociations with the Free Democrats, the finance minister is expected to propose an increase of 7 prennigs (about 13p) a line in petrol taxes from next April and DM3 (about 65p) a litre extra on spirits. He also plans to cut back state subsidies for savers and housebuilders, to remove progres-sively subsidies that encourage oil consumption and to delay for three months next year's Civil Service pay award. The federal government tends there is no scope today for Germany to finance its way out of a slow-down in the economy through deficit spending.

But when Herr Matthöfer and his experts pore over the details of the budget in the coming months in an attempt to keen expenditure within the 4 per cent growth ceiling envis-aged for 1981 they will only be experiencing what has become a general phenomenon in economic policy making in Germany—a lack of room for manoeuvre.

The need to cope with new constraints applies also to the Federal Bank in its money and credit policies. The weakness of the mark-reflecting the probability of a DM27,000m to DM30,000m current account balance of pay-ments deficit this year—has forced the authorities in Frankfurt to maintain interest rates at higher real levels than appear justified by the slowdown in the domestic economy since the spring. Capital market interest rates of around 8.4 per cent are a genuine burden for companies when inflation has nosed down-But in international terms, they appear miserly when compared with the returns available on dollar or sterling deposits.

The likelihood of slower economic growth next year is also bound to have an impact on salary and wage levels. The critics would argue that in be facing a real drop in in-recent years the tone has been come, such as appears likely far too lax with the result that in Britain or Belgium, but to do more than stagnate in real terms next year. The economics ministry forecasts that a 3.5 to 4.5 per cent increase in gross incomes is the most that companies and workers can hope to achieve next year.

In Germany it took longer than in other countries for the second oil shock to translate into a slowdown of economic activity. But now that Germany is shouldering a massive balance of payments deficit, the international assessment of German economy has changed radically.

The weakness of the mark has proved to be an unexpectedly serious handicap on pectedly serious handicap on economic policy making. Its tendency to devalue against the dollar and sterling has made lighting inflation more difficult through raising the cost of imported goods and particularly oil. The German currency's decline has rended to nullify the fact that in volume terms German exports are rising at a faster rate than imports.

The authorities now believe that Germany's current account deficit should drop to about DM20,000m next year from the DM30,000m expected for this year. But so far the foreign exchange markets have failed to honour such claims. Only when the markers find ·faith in the Deutsche mark again will the way be clear for West Germany to recover from its present economic malaise.

image of the association as a including such a staunth lata fares-fixing cartel is at last being softened.

The association has just completed its first year as what Mr Knut Hammarskjöld, its director general, calls, "the new lata". Fare-fixing has become a less important role, making up about 20 per cent making up about 20 per cent of its activity, and there is greater emphasis on what is known as the trade association role where the airline members range of subjects vital to the industry's health, such as safety, technical developments and security.

As a result of a far-reaching change of policy which began at the 1977 annual meeting in

According to the latest count, 11 of the 106 members have come out of fare-fixing. Although it is a small percentage of the membership, it contains, significantly, some of the largest United States airlines; including American, Braniff, Eastern, TWA and United. -Two other important United States carriers, Pan American and Delta, decided to leave the association three years ago. It was their decision which went a long way towards precipitat-ing a crisis in the affoirs of lata and the reconsideration of much criticized policies, the fruit of which should be seen at this week's meeting.

Iata's troubles really began with the introduction by Presi-dent Carter soon after he began his term of office four years ago of airline deregulation. Under this, United States airlines were allowed to fly virtually where they liked and at what fares they liked, and the Civil Aeronautics Bureau (CAB), which had hitherto controlled and prices was trolled such matters, was instructed to prepare to wind

Iata national air has now been given a two-year breathing space during which United States airlines are free to take part in fares confer-ences while lata's activities will, in its own words, be "closely monitored". lata continues to establish fare levels on international routes throughout the rest of the world, except on "cahntage" routes between countries and their dependencies, such as London-Hongkong, but it does so in a more relaxed manner than in the past. The "unanimity rule", under which every airline in a parti-cular geographical area of the world had to agree on all fares, has been softened. Govern-ments, which always had to approve the fares thrashed out in lata meetings, are beginning to take a keener interest in the association's decisions.

This interest does not always result in cheap fares, however.

Tackling the mounting problem of the young unemployed unemployment.

Favourites for the list include an expansion of the Youth Opportunities Programme and a drive to encourage industry to create more apprenticeship schemes. If handled imaginatively, both could provide not only gains for youngsters but also important benefits for employers.

If the Government is to honour its pledge to offer every out-of-work school-leaver either job or vocationally-oriented training by next Easter, some modest loosening of the pursestrings seems imperative. Although there was a per drop of 62,000 youngsters on the unemployment register in October, compared with September, the under-lying trend is worsening.

Not'only is the October total of 145,657 jobless school-leavers about 76,000 higher than at the same time last year but the number of vacancies has plummeted—7,900 notified to careers offices and 108,700 to employ offices and 108,700 to employ-ment offices, as against last October's figures of 28,700 and 246,700 respectively. Furthermore, the effect of the sixties' baby boom will be reaching its peak during 1981, which means that more openings are needed almost immediately simply to contain unemploy-ment at its present level. The urgency of it all was spelt out earlier this month by Mr Geoffrey Holland, Director of the Manpower Services Com-mission's Special Programmes Division. He said that the Youth Division. He said that the Youth Opportunities Programme would need to provide 300,000 places—50,000 more than originally estimated—during this year. Since then, he has revised the figure sharply upwards. Another 10,000 applicants have entered the programme—pushing numbers substantially over the present budgeted limits. "A more realistic target", Mr more realistic target.", Mr Holland now says, "if we are to absorb all the youngsters who will need support, may be 330,000 to 350,000 places." The need for the Government to grasp the nettle is far more than merely cosmetic. Ministers are worried about the tragedy instead with the dole queue.

One way and another, the xisting "special measures" existing are producing activities for about 146,000 people (324,000 during the full year). They consist of: the special temporary employment programme (Step), geared to young adults: Com-munity Industry, a scheme for disadvantaged school-leavers run by the National Association of Youth Clubs; and, by far the largest element, the Youth Opportunities Programme, which despite the clamp on public spending increased its hudger last April from £130m to £183m. Since its inception two and a half years ago more than half a million 16 to 18-year-olds—the majority with no qualifications have received work experi-ence or training via this prog-ramme. Until recently seven out of ten have either found permanent employment or gone on to some form of further education. The scale, if not always the quality, is impressive. Yet simply expanding the programme to cater for more people will not be enough. Three issues urgently require constructive thought—stracting sponsor-ship: the relevance of the training; and the prospects for compacted when the youngsters when they leave the youngsters are to derive real and long-term benefit, the Youth Opportunities Programme needs to be more attuned to the genuine requirements of emplovers. This will happen only if any investment they make in training offers at least some prospect of a realistic pay-off. To see what can be achieved.

As with the Youth Opportunities Programme, school-leavers are paid a training allowance (funded by the employer). There is no question, as in Britain, of free collective hargaining estab-lishing an artificially high link between apprenticeship rates and skilled men's pay. The system is attractive to employers because it offers them some security against high trained turnover. Interestingly, small firms—precisely the sector which our own Government believes offers the helt long-term hope of creating real emplayment—are among the most enthusiastic sponsors. Recause the scheme is cost-effective, pro-viding about 630,000 "appren-ticeships". West German tesh-agors are far more insulated than our own against unempley-

There is also a claring need in Britain to look at traditional apprenticethips. Numbers have fallen to just over half compared with 1968, in engineering. for example, there has been a drop from 170,000 to under 100,000-with an make this year, according to Mr Sol Margolis, of the Engineering Em-ployers Federation, of our about 20,000 / some 17 per cent down on 1979).

Three reasons for the decline are that many apprenticeshing are unnecessarily long, couly and too restrictive. Too little account is taken of the shortcuts allowed by new technology and certain occupations, at pre-sent labelled "skilled", need re-classifying.

But, in line with the Govern-ment's expressed wish to re-move some of the administrative hurdens on small businesses. there are concessions on financial disclosure for medium and small companies. By definition, these will largely be private companies.

Companies

Private companies will end up in the top tier only if they qualify on two of three criteria: turnover over £5m, net worth of at least £2.5m and an average number of employees of 250.

Medium companies would need to be below these figures but quality as such by having two of three criteria: a turn-

Earlier in the week, the Russians announced a 55 million nonnes shortfall on their grain harvest indicating a con-tinuing need for many imports.

Whether the Russians will get more grain from the United States depends on the Presi-dential election and a decision on the embarga on the embargo.

How drastic steps could be avoided in fixing cocoa prices

Production

When I last wrote about cocoa in September it seemed likely that the scheduled meeting of the International Cocoa Organization would be adjourned for the second time. That happened, and today sees the start of yet another confabulation of proanother confabulation of pro-ducers and consumers, this time under the auspices of the under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in Geneva.

It was the impassioned appeal of Dr Gamani Corea, Unctad's secretary general, that probably prevented the previous meeting in London from morbidity debating the dismantling of the ICCO and the dispersal between members of its roughly $230m in funds. Not only does the ICCO live to fight another day, but it may ead up marching alongside the other battalions recruited into It was the impassioned appeal other battalions recruited into Unctad's grand army of the common fund.

And yet, and yet... There still remains the little matter of the price range within which buffer stock intervention will be permitted. Although not the only issue at stake, it has proved the biggest obstacle to a The discussion will be taking place against the background of London cocoa prices touching their lowest points in four years on Friday. December delivery closed at 1990.50 a tonne. The fundamentals of cocoa's apparently relentless slide have been well rehearsed. At the be-ginning of last week the ICCO raised its forecast of cocoa bean production in 1979,80 from 1.53m ronnes to 1.58m. But world consumption could only be 1.45m tonnes. Over the next five years cocoa output is expected to increase by about 53,000 tonnes a year, accumulating to 1.86m tonnes in 1985. In that year, consumption will be between 1.7m and 1.82m tonnes.

This surplus on any likely price forecast is the dominant factor in the market. Indeed, it s to some extent independent of price projections because the number of trees recently planted in the Ivory Coast and Brazil particularly will inevitably bear fruit during this period. Other producers are also joining in the fund. India, for example, where crop two Commodities over the past decade. If 30m trees live, output in the 1970s could reach 100,000 tonnes a year.

compounded by two other factors, hardly the fault of cocoa producers and the source among many of them of not a little irritation. Much the biggest consumer of cocoa is the developed world's choco-late industry. But it seems that the rich are losing their sweet teeth. The demographic transformation which has brought population growth rates almost to zero implies fewer young consumers. Chocolate manufacturers have also seen the price of sugar soar—daily raws were £383 a tonne in London on Friday.

More esoteric is the fact that cocoa butter, as important to the chocolate maker as cocoa powder, the bean's other product, has remained expensive relative to powder. Over the last 12 months cocoa prices have fallen by over 40 ner cent, but cocoa butter prices are hardly changed. If one adds high sugar prices, the result is high sugar prices, the result is manufacturers forced to raise retail chocolate prices, meeting demand resistance. The fall in cocoa bean prices has therefore not generated increased consumption.

If the five-year forecasts are there is unusual degree of consensus on the outlook-an intervention price range pitched too high could fatally threaten a Third International Cocoa Agreement. Work done by an American expert, Dr Merrill J. Bateman, plots the possible consequences of different minimum prices, suggesting clearly that the pro-ducers' preferred floor of 120 cents a pound and their dislike of downward adjustments are impractical.

The cocoa consumers, led by the United States, have by con-trast argued for in intervention range of $1 to $1.10. Dr Bateman argues that if the new for example, whose crop two agreement has a buffer stock years ago was a humble 700 capacity of 250,000 tonnes, a minimum price of £1.00 could be defended into the 1981/82 crop year. If the minimum were $1.10 a pound, however, were $1.10 a pound, however, the deleterious impact on demand would be such that by 1982 83 the buffer would contain 485,000 tonnes, and two years later a massive 785,000 tonnes. Carrying the latter volume of stocks would cost $286m a year or seven times the ICCO's expected income in that year.

Not that a £1.00 price would be cheap to defend either. At that level, cocoa withheld from the market in 1984/85 would amount to 520,000 tonnes, for which the carrying cost would be $172m. In both cases these enormous mountains of beans worthy competitors to anything the EEC has to offer-would have to be financed for several years if prices are not to collapse. The denouement is be their mass destruction. The denouement might

The alternative favoured by consumers is that such drastic steps can be avoided if at given levels of stocks the floor price is lowered, for example in 5 cent steps. Dr Bateman suggests one trigger point at 100,000 tonnes, and thereafter at every 50,000 tonnes. By 1982 84 the total adjustment would be 15 cents placing the would be 15 cents, placing the floor at 85 cents. This should establish equilibrium, with cocoa bean prices stable and the buffer stock set at around 235.000 tonnes.

There are of course many presuppositions here. A disastrous crop failure, for instance, cannot be ruled out. But the seriousness of the argument cannot be gainsaid. On the basis of this econometric model of the world cocoa market, the way for the cocoa producers to maximize their returns is accept lower floorprices than they have hitherto indicated.

If they are lucky, economic recovery among industrial countries could restore demand unexpectedly fast. That would be a bonus. But if the main aim during talks over the coming two or three weeks is to find a workable agreement which will ensure foreign exchange and keep the hopes of other similar agreements alive, long term gains should not be sac rificed.

New office blocks coming up on market

Several new office developments are coming up towards completion in various parts of the country. One, in London, is Godliman House, at 17 Godliman Street, EC4, which is almost com-

A St Martin's Property Group project, it provides some 21.000 sq ft of offices, together with a restaurant of about 3,000 sq ft in an area just to the south of St Paul's which is a rapidly improving office location. The offices are air-conditioned and the floors are so arranged that they can form either a number of private offices or open plan The rent being quoted for the whole building is £375,000 a year and letting is through the City office of John D. Wood. Now at the topping-out stage and due for completion next March is Cumberland House, Southend. This is a scheme being carried out by French Kier Property Investments. The building will provide some 12,700 sq ft of offices on four storeys. There is substantial on-site car parking, and the building is also close to a multi-storey car park. Letting agents are Watson, Temple, Talbot and White, of Southend, who are expecting a rent of £4.75 a sq ft.

French Kier, incidentally, also has plans for a large retail development in Southend. This will comprise about 350,000 sq it of accommodation. Details are expected to be announced shortly.

In Cheam, Surrey, work has started on the second phase of a new office complex adjacent to Cheam railway station. The scheme is being carried out by Hanover St George Investments in conjunction with the British Rail Property Board, and is due for completion in the autumn of

It will be known as St George House and will comprise a three-storey building of 8,500 sq ft. Contractors are J. Jarvis and Sons. Leslie L. Brown and Co and Jones Lang Wootton, the agents who let the first phase of the scheme to Advance Linea Services, are responsible for the letting of St George House. Not far away, in Sutton.

Granada Properties, part of the Granada Group, has received planning permission for a large office scheme to be known as Sutton Park House. The site is that of the old Granada cinema and overlooks Manor Park with road frontages to Throwley Road,
